DE BONIS NON. This phrase is used in cases where the goods of a deceased person have not all been administered. When an executor or administrator has been appointed, and the estate is not fully settled, and the executor or administrator is dead, has absconded, or from any cause has been removed, a second administrator is appointed to perform the duty remaining to be done, who is called an administrator de bonis non, an administrator of the goods not administered and he becomes by the appointment the only representative of the deceased.

In this instance, the original administrator, Samuel Hick, had died earlier in 1797, having not made much of a dent in the 23,200 he had been tasked with administering ten year's earlier (see Administration 1 1787 papers).

To all to whom these presents shall come, I Sir Robert Chambers Knight, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, Do hereby Certify that William Jackson Esquire, who hath signed the Certificate hereunto annexed is Register of the said Supreme Court of Judicature in its Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and is also a Notary Public by lawful Authority admitted and sworn, dwelling and practising in the Town of Calcutta at Fort William in Bengal aforesaid, and that to all Certificates or other Writings signed by him in his aforesaid Capacity of Register of the said Court, and also as a Notary Public, full faith and credit is given in Court and without.

In Faith and Testimony whereof

Witness my hand
